AS A WOMAN SEES IT

Rheta Childs Dorr

Speculation as to what will happen to European women after the war occupies considerable space on the editorial pages, both in Europe and in the United States.

H. G. Wells says that English women's splendid conduct has won them the vote, and has killed every argument against their subjection. He thinks marriages will be fewer, for a term of years, owing to the shortage of men and the increased cost of living. Women will continue in wage earning, even after marriage.

A biologist writing to an American newspaper, is of the same opinion, but he thinks that these women will all be of the masculine type in actual anatomy. Women who retain quite feminine anatomy and physiology will express themselves along typical lines of feminine psychology, and they may be expected to return to the home to make more foundations for the state Government and administration of this state which is subtended by the purely feminine woman may be well conducted by women who have approached the masculine type and who form a quite separate class.

In former years a woman who showed the slightest traces of originality or power of thought was spoken of as possessing a masculine mind. And now the women who have gone out into the world of industry and show that they are quite as capable as men, must be stigmatized as approaching the masculine type anatomically and biologically. Hereafter when we see a woman managing a business or organizing a biennial convention we shall be told, yes, they are pretty and feminine in appearance, but a biologist knows that they approach the masculine type.

Now the women in England, France and Germany who have taken hold of every kind of industry and have shown themselves capable, industrious, and efficient are women of every type. Ladies who have never done a hand's turn in their lives are working on farms, getting up at 4 in the morning and milking a dozen cows before breakfast. They are risking their very lives in cordite factories, they are doing all kinds of heavy, disagreeable, dangerous work. And enjoying it.

What will these women do with their newly discovered energy and skill after the war? Settle down to the hum-drum of housekeeping in a suburb? Scarcely. In earning their living in congenial work the women are doing what the next generation of women would have done had the world war never been fought. The war has brought about abruptly what time was bringing slowly and with much opposition. That is all there is to it.

TERRIFIC SLAUGHTER OF BRITISH SOLDIERS

Of Iraq Expeditionary Force According to Correspondence from Vienna.

VIENNA, June 6.—The losses of the British Iraq expeditionary force amounted, to the end of the second week in May, to more than 100,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners, according to Herr End Politz.

In a series of engagements with the Turks last November the British lost 15,000 dead, according to this journal, and this number must, it says, be added together with its proportion of wounded, to the British casualty lists published at that time admitting a loss of 25,000 men in the Iraq campaign. At the first of the year 1916 the British losses were more than 40,000 officers and men killed and wounded in action or dead of disease, according to this paper's figures.

The battle of Mehabah, late in January, cost the British 5,000 men and approximately 11,500 wounded, on authority of Turkish reports, and a few days before that the British are declared to have had losses of about 5,000 dead. This series of engagements is conservatively estimated here to have cost the British Iraq forces about 20,000 men.

At Erbilah, early in March, the British left on the battlefield, according to the Turkish official communique, nearly 5,000 dead; and in the attacks made by the Turks upon British forces in the same vicinity in April the British lost nearly 10,000 killed and wounded, it is claimed.

If to all these figures are added the prisoners of Kut-el-Amara, the total estimate of 100,000 in British losses is passed.

The many friends of David Curran were sorry to hear of the death of his sister, Josephine Curran Blanken, of New York City, who died Friday in a hospital there.

Weston people were busy all last week attending the closing exercises of the high school. Monday night was class night for the Seniors and some very clever things were given them, especially the prophecy, which was the witch scene from Shakespeare's Macbeth. The play, "The Sweet Girl Graduate," was a ludicrous farce in which the worn-out parents, dress-makers and election teacher of a modern graduate figured prominently.

Tuesday night the joint literary program of the ex-scholar and the Columbian Literary Societies, was given. In each part of which the members acquitted themselves admirably. Wednesday night the Juniors gave their annual class play, "Engaged by Wednesday," and on that evening each member of the Junior class had a chance to show his or her histrionic ability.

Thursday the music teacher of the Weston public schools, Miss Laura Lowe, gave an operetta, "A Feast of Lanterns," which is a Chinese musical. One of the features of the evening was the presence of a real Chinese baby, daughter of a Chinese laundryman of this city.

Friday night the commencement exercises of the graduating class were held in the big school auditorium. The invocation was given by the Rev. John Beddow, the class address by F. R. Yoke, the presentation of diplomas by F. E. Janis, president of the board of education, and the benediction by the Rev. Mr. Isler. There were twenty-nine members of the graduating class, the largest number that has ever been graduated from the Weston high school.

Immediately after the commencement exercises the graduating class, faculty, members of the board of education and their wives, the ministers and about 200 of the alumni of the Weston high school, went to the Baptist church for the annual alumni banquet. The orchestra played a grand march and the members took places at the tables, which were decorated with roses, and from the chandeliers to the four corners of the room Weston high school colors, gray and blue were entwined. After a delicious luncheon was partaken of the toastmaster, Dana Young, introduced Miss Regina Hale, who gave the address of welcome to the graduates, and her toast was responded to by William Grant, of the class of 1916. Other toasts were given by R. H. Hale, president of the alumni association, and member of the board of education, F. R. Yoke, the Rev. Mr. Beddow, Walter Warren, Victor Houghton and Miss Rose Troxwell, whose untiring work made the banquet the success it was, and Robert Pritchard. At a late hour, or rather an early one, the alumni adjourned, after each one present had been presented with a box of Royer's candy, the gift of R. B. Cook, one of Weston's most loyal alumni. All present voiced their thanks and the sentiment that next year's banquet would be the success that this one was.

FARMER SMITH OF BRUSHY FORK WRITES TO BURKE

"Thanks to the People Who Got Me to Use Nerv-Worth," Declares.

Below is an endorsement of Nerv-Worth which will fix the attention of Route One and Clarksburg folk, so many of whom the writer, Mr. John W. Smith lives on the E. I. Roy farm, Bridgeport. His friends will rejoice in the fact that his health is so much improved. Note what he says:

"Burke's Drug Store: I have had two paralytic strokes and have been in bad shape for over two years.

"I have declined with different doctors, but no results. My bones ached all the time. In fact I have been in an awful condition and never thought I would get anything that would help me.

"But thanks to the people that got me to use Nerv-Worth I have taken one bottle and I feel like a different man altogether and I believe I will be as well as ever in a short time.

"Yours truly,
"JOHN W. SMITH."

The people who got Mr. Smith to use Nerv-Worth were true friends and benefactors. Most of the people who are made over by Nerv-Worth insist on passing the good news along, just as Mr. Smith's friends did.

Your dollar back at the Burke drug store if Nerv-Worth does not help you.—Advertisement.
